Who can be a Special Educational Needs and Disability (SEND) Champion?

You could be a parent of a child or young person with SEND or a practitioner working with children and young people with an active interest in SEND. Even if you do not know much about special educational needs and disabilities, we are looking for people who are passionate about inclusive practice, want to develop their skills and share their knowledge with others to be well informed and make a difference in our local community and beyond. If this sounds like you or anybody you know, we'd love for you to be involved!

What are we offering?

We want to welcome professionals and parents to our relaunched training and information programme. Each month we are offering a 1–2-hour virtual session with the objectives to upskill, share knowledge and best practice on a wide range of topics covering SEND.

We had very positive feedback from our sessions so far, those who attended said:

“that was the most informative and concise training I have had”

“Very informative, thank you for all you are doing to help raise awareness and understanding”

“the session was very helpful”

We would like to invite you to book onto the next cohort of sessions
